

Develop high level marketing expertise
Study a Master of Marketing, 100% online

Blogs » Customer and marketing relations

Managing brands in a digital world

Jean-Luc Ambrosi | 12 April, 2016 09:02 | 0 Comments | Share this post

With digital integration at the core of customer management, many marketers have been questioning whether the principles and approaches to branding are fundamentally different in a digitally led environment.

The rise of digitally native brands such as Uber, Netflix and Amazon, and the fear of more disruptors to come, have driven a review of many business models, but should they also challenge the foundation of brand strategy?

To answer this question, we first need to consider what digital means. First is foremost, digital is an enabler – it's a multi-faceted communication medium as well as a sales and services distribution channel. Therefore, while the communication approach and techniques inherent to this medium must be very specific and tailored, fundamental principles behind effective brand communication should still hold true.

Look back, for example, at when television revolutionised older mediums of communication. The core principles of branding and communication did not change with its development, it is the tactical application that evolved and its associated techniques and modalities.

In many respects, the same applies to digital. Strategically, the principles of branding remain constant: Primarily the need for differentiation, the necessity to demonstrate a clear value proposition, and a holistic approach to branding. While the environment for customer interaction has changed, customer rational thought processes and fundamental emotional drivers have not; therefore the same brand requirements remain.

Whether the digital presence is the main interface with prospects and customers or a support mechanism, it must reinforce the core positioning and value-add that the brand brings to its customers. The repetition of the promise and expression of this promise must be recurring across all channels again and again, provide consistency and reinforcement.

At the same time, consistency does not mean bland sameness. Tactically, digital branding needs to be adapted to new and varied forms of customer interactions. Digital consumption is often closer to the fast and furious than to the leisurely stroll of shopping centres. Because it is anywhere anytime, it requires much greater communication adaptability such as calibrated designs for different formats, customised content to different segments, tailored offerings to different times or locations and so on.

But I still argue the core essence of the brand, what makes consumer tick both rationally and emotionally, needs to remain constant.

The environment we're operating in may be fast, may be varied, may be transient but the brand must continuously work in one homogeneous and continuous direction. As Paul Simon once sang, "nothing is different, but everything's changed".

Tags: digital strategy, brand strategy, marketing strategy, digital marketing

0 Comments

Jean-Luc Ambrosi

Jean-Luc Ambrosi is an award winning marketer and recognised expert in branding and customer relationship management. He is the author of the new book, Branding to Differ, a strategic and practical guide on how to build and manage a successful brand.

2016 NOMINATIONS CLOSING SOON!

CMO50

NOMINATE NOW

SUPPORTING ASSOCIATION

POPULAR

- Channel 7 offers Olympic Games viewers VR
- Why this B2B CMO believes marketing
- How this startup is using design thinking to
- How to align your marketing vision with
- CMO's top 10 martech stories for the week - 4

FEATURING MARKETING LEADERS FROM

CMO salesforce

Tweets by @CMOAustralia

CMO CMOAustralia @CMOAustralia
All our panelists are locked in for @salesforce #MCFOM16 - check them out & register now: cmo.com.au/future-of-mark...

CMO CMOAustralia @CMOAustralia
Why this Aussie business is tapping #designthinking to find competitive advantage cmo.com.au/article/604505 ...

Embed View on Twitter

FEATURED WHITEPAPERS

Harvard Business Review Whitepaper: Designing a Marketing Organisation for ...
What's the optimal structure for your marketing team? With the rapid pace of technology innovation, ...

Economist Intelligence Report - The Path to 2020: Marketers ...
What do top marketing execs from Unilever, JP Morgan Chase, and Philips think the world ...

MORE WHITEPAPERS >

BLOG POSTS

What does the CMO of 2017 look like?

The marketing landscape continues to evolve, and leading marketers are working hard to ride the wave. So what does it take to stand out from the pack?

Andrew Haussegger
Co-founder and CEO, Green Hat

“already it has become THE AUSTRALIAN OLYMPICS.....ME AND THE MISSUS WANT TO SEE UNIVERSAL ATHLETES COMPETING IN ALL OLYMPIC SPORTS.....”

- mike johns

Channel 7 offers Olympic Games viewers VR and 360-degree video

ZONES

TERADATA Teradata Marketing Zone

LATEST PODCAST

Closing the Gap Episode 11: Achieving marketing ROI

In the 11th and final episode of the Closing the Gap podcast series, produced by Brandhook, Asahi Beverages' former marketing strategy director, Darryn Wallace, chats about delivering a true ROI on marketing programs.

14 OCTOBER 2015 | 0:20:07 | PLAY PODCAST

MORE PODCASTS >

SIGN IN

Username Password

Username *****

Sign up or Forgot password Login

salesforce THE CMO: FUTURE OF MARKETING 24 August | Sydney Chief customer extraordinaire Register Now CMO